Cognitive Disorders in Adults

Cognitive disorders are very common in older adults. This presentation will review the types of disorders which result in cognitive decline and dementia in adults. There are many different types of dementia, with a wide array of complaints, symptoms, treatments and risk factors leading to the development of neurological, psychiatric and medical illnesses. The methods of diagnosis and variety of treatment approaches will be discussed. Information will be provided about the resources of the University of New Mexico's newly established Memory & Aging Center and its clinical, educational and research missions.

Announcement:

The NMACC Christmas Party will be Wednesday, December 7th from 6 PM to 9 PM at Tanoan Country Club. Please plan accordingly and Merry early Christmas!

President's Piece:

It's time to nominate members for the 2017 NMACC Board. It's been my privilege to serve this Board during 2016, and look forward to seeing Shelley Hennie's hand of leadership guide in 2017. If you are interested in serving this incredible group of senior care professionals, call Shelley (her number at Footprints Home Care is in the directory online) and let her know. You must be a member in good standing to be considered.
